A City built by surviving Rustam colonists in the wake of the Cielciński invasion in 16209. Built on the edge of a vast plain, sheltered on one side by the ice-capped face of a nameless mountain. The buildings are comprised of ground-dug starships.

The most infamous of the Imperial prison planets; the last destination of many political prisoners. A dismal, cold world. Salvaged/scraping wrecked ships often done in orbit about Belusha by the Martians themselves. They stripped incoming vessels of weapons and more sensitive materials—electronics, fuel containers, and the like—before passing the hulks down to the surface. These were tendered down from a great height, carried by

A former trading hub and mining colony on the Centaurine frontier on the border with the Veil of Marinus, site of a major battle in the Cielcin Wars.

City on the planet Gododin constructed with white stone quarried from the mountains that shelter the city; overlooks the seemingly infinite expanse of grassland and the locals call the Green Sea.

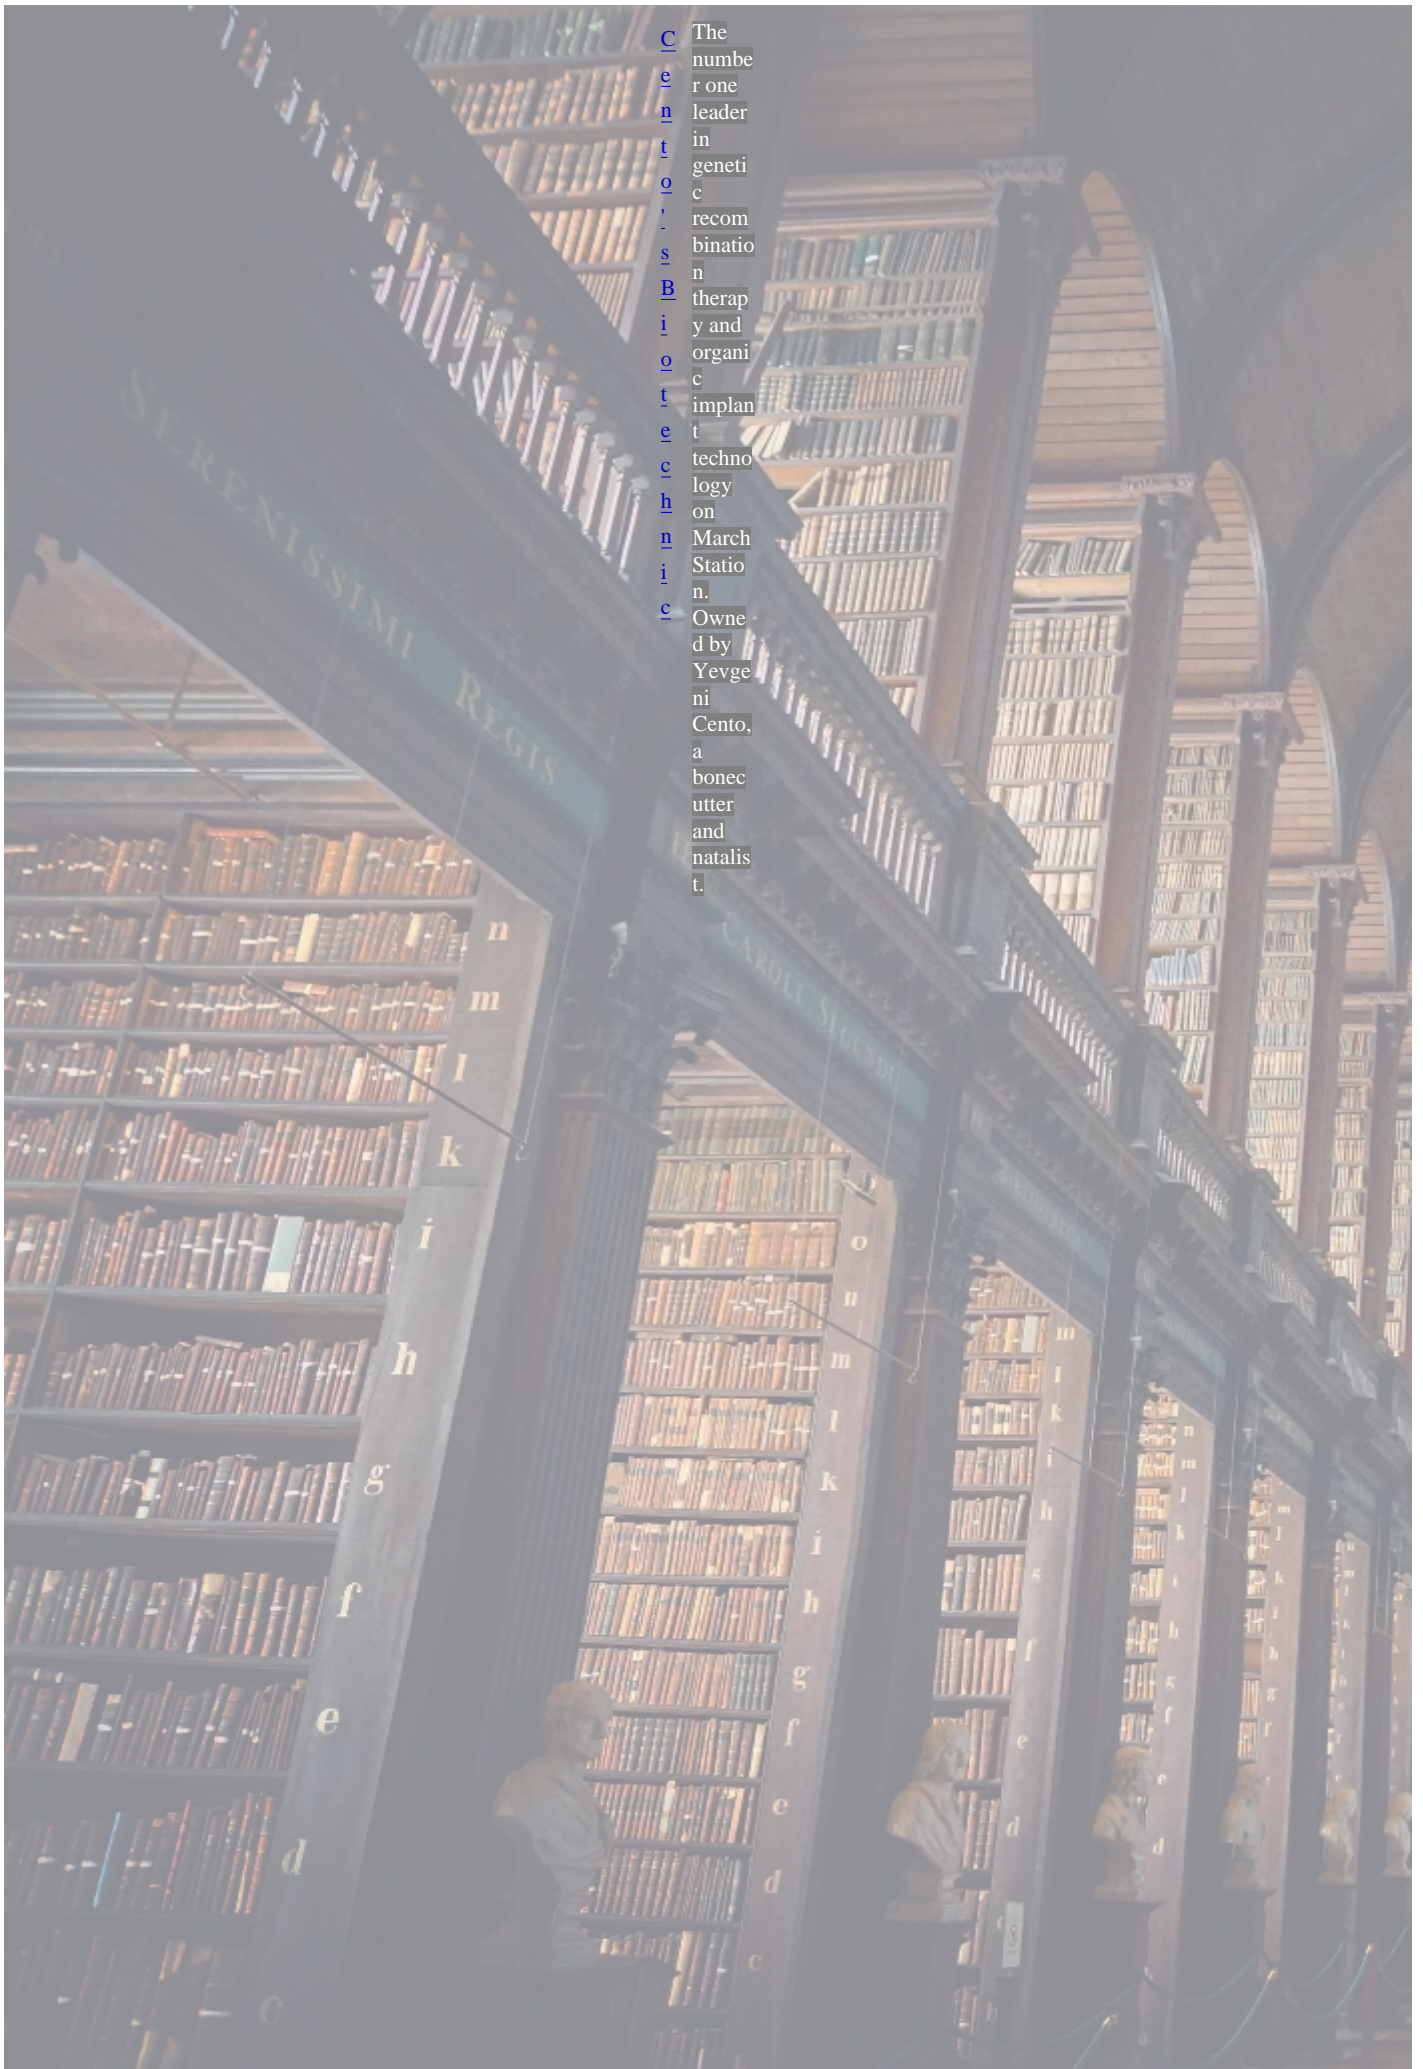

Site of a major battle during the Cielcin Wars.

The innermost and farthest of the four arms of the galaxy colonized by the Sollan Empire, north of Sagittarius, Orion, and Perseus. Most Centaurine provinces are clustered near the heart of the galaxy, just south of the Veil of Marinus and the galactic core.

The number one leader in genetic recombination therapy and organic implant technology on March Station. Owned by Yevgeni Cento, a bonecutter and natalist.

The first Imperial colony in the Centaurus Arm, named for the garden at the end of the world, a moon of the gas giant Atlas. Never an important colony (it was eclipsed quickly by its neighbors), it is nevertheless known for the massive scholastic athenaeum at Nov Belgae r.
