Emperor Gabriel II

Spoilers ahead, proceed with caution

- Former Emperor of the Sollan Empire.
- His brother, TOR ARAMINI, the architect of the Great Library at Nov Belgaer on Colchis.
- His descendant, Emperor William XXIII

In the fifth millennium ISD, an Imperial civil war, known as the Hundred Year Terror, began in which House Avent was removed from the throne by Boniface the Pretender. In the wake of that civil war, the newly reinstated Emperor Gabriel II ordered the Imperial Archives moved from Avalon to the newly minted colony of Colchis, then a remote military outpost. Ever since, it has been the site of the Imperial Great Library and maintained by the scholiasts.

Emperor William Siberian the Cruel

Spoilers ahead, proceed with caution

Former Emperor of the Sollan Empire. Infamous for his order of Decimation.

—His descendant, Emperor William XXIII

“ Decimation. Decimation was one of the more serious punishments the Legions leveled against its own. The offending unit—be it a decade, a century, a chiliad, cohort, or even an entire legion—would be gathered up and made to draw lots, blindly taking a coin from a chest. One in ten of those coins was marked with an icon of Death, and the men who received them were lined up and shot by the men who did not. Their former brothers in arms. Decimation had fallen in and out of practice over the long millennia depending on the will and whim of the various Emperors—here outlawed, there enforced. The Emperor William Siberian—whom Impatian named William the Cruel—ordered fully one hundred legions to decimate after the Jaddian principalities won their independence.
